Speaks Editorially of This District.

Commenting editorially on the mining outlook in Lake of the Toronto, financial publication, says:

"Mining in Northern Ontario, which for the last two years has had anything but a bright outlook, has within the last two months taken a turn for the better. Con-Clipper at 9 o'clock this morning to siderably more work is going on than last year, and apparently people have not completely lost faith in the wealth of the country. Three or four years ago, when the mining boom was at its height, we cautioned our readers time and again to be careful, and before investing their money to make searching inquiries, and as far as was in their power, satisfy themselves as to the different properties at the time placed on the market, as it was well known to us that there was wildcat properties with carefully prepared prospectus, and an attractive directorate, sent broadcast throughout the country. We did what we could then to protect our readers, but we are afraid that the propositions were painted in too glowing colors and that many were taken in by them. It looks, however, at the present time as though people were going about min-Dyot, Elmira. THE WINNIPEG EXHIBITION.

The cultivation of artistic sentiments is worthy of every effort on the part of an institution whose objects are to instruct as well as to amuse. At the Winnipeg Industrial exhibition, which opens on July 21, there will be seen one of the best collections of paintings from the brushes of Canadian artists that has ever been gathered within one room. Special lighting arrangements have been perfected, and the pictures will he hung so as to show to the best advantage. The value of such an opportunity to students who can improve their ideas by the study of the works of master craftsmen is obvious. The paintings have been secured from the Ontario Society of Artists, and C. M. Manly, who is president of the society, will be in

If a political heeler is entitled to any reward at all outside of a term in a provincial prison, he should be not by the people whose ends he frustfates, and prevents an honest expression of public opinion at the polls. He should never be foisted upon those same people as their pensioner, because he has rendered no public service. Neither does it follow that because he has talked louder-than other men, and has been successful in electing his employer, that he (the beeler) is therefore qualined to administer justice in the land.

The man who looks for a reward for speaking his mind and easting is vote conscientiously for his party is as bad as the man who sells his vote for eash, and as bad as the man who buys it. Sir Thomas Cleeve & Co., Limerick freland, manufacture one-third of the condensed milk used in the world. Sir Thomas and his brothers, who are interested with him in this wonderful trade, were born in the Fastern Townships, Quebec.

A large trade in poultry is conducted from the continent, principally in turkeys and geese at Christmas. Russia has, however, made a bid for the London market, 1 ore especially for chickens, of which half a mullion are used annually in the metropolis.

The Canadian trade in poultry with the old country was started so long ago as 1874, and is now sure to assome large proportions. Many Canadians would, however, be surprised to find that poultry is still a luxury and not an ordinary article of diet in this country; it is rarely found on the tables of the working or, indeed, of the middle classes. Canada c n remedy this, and with great admage to her farmers, consequently in following may be of interest :

OUT OF THE DEPTH :.

The Punishments of the Past Conditions That the British People Have Outgrown in Treating Criminals.

Returning to the quaint diary of old Fisherton gaol, Wilts, we (Lloyd's Weekly Newspaper) find a note in 1826 of a pauper eighty-five years old being charged with refusing to work. On being convicted he was sentenced to one month's imprisonment and to be once privately whipped.

Marianne Moore was tried in 1829 for felony in the house of the lady milliners to whom she was servant, and had a narrow escape. The pe culiarity in the case was that by an Act of Parliament passed in the previous year (Peel's Act) private stealing in a dwelling house was rendered capital, if to the amount of tive pounds. When the five sovereigns were weighed one of them proved to be of light weight, and the capital charge was therefore abandoned.

Death penalties were then so common that in 1830 Baron Vaughan pointed out that of fifty-four cases to come before him there were only seven which were not capital.

A man believing that the sale of a wife publicly in the market place with a halter round her neck would have the full force of a divorce legally obtained, took his wife (equally willing to try a change of circumstances) into the public market at Melksham, and there disposed of her for two shillings and sixpence to a man named William Watts. The couple were committed to prison for the offence, but Watts was acquitted. An extraordinary conspiracy was mearthed in 1836. Two brothers in association with a woman carried on prosecutions of felony in Dorset. Somerset and Gloucester. The whole of the evidence was fabricated. the object being to obtain the expenses allowed for such prosecutions.

A curious point of law arose 1837. James Curtis and Ann Pontin were indicted for having stolen what was described as being mutton. The counsel objected that if anything was stolen it was a sheep, of which there was abundant evidence to have convicted them. They were both acquitted on this flaw.

An ordinary case of rollbery obtained some importance in 1838, by reason of an underlying romance, as will be seen in the following story :-

"George Thorne was indicted for tealing a quantity of bristles. the property of his employer. John Wilkins, of Westlerry. It appears that Phorne was engaged by Wilkins as a oreman, and received £100 salary. with an agreement; that when the profits of sale amounted to a certain sum he should receive tifty per cent. open the profits. A great many parcels of bristles baving been missed, Mr. Wilkins marked some packages and scented them with lavender water. These, being also very shortly missed, were traced to the possession of Thorne, ill is necessary here to premise, that it is the custom in many shops to allow the employed to purchase anything they may want for their dan use, without paying for it as the time, and at the cost price, provided that it be properly entered in the day book to the credit of the master.) Thorne had kept company with a Miss Hymer, a young hidy possessing considerable property and to whom he was shortly to have lose normal, the wedding day being fixed, and a handsomely furnished house os for encloses e $1 to $1 a prepared.
